Inn, cottages and former warehouse. Circa 1770's. Red brick; slate roof; brick ridge stack and integral end stacks. Aligned north-east/south-west. Facing south-east. 2 storeys; slightly irregular fenestration but essentially 4:3:4 bays, casements with segmental heads, central pedimented break, former warehouse to the left, inn and attached cottage to the right. Central break has 3 segmental-headed arches at ground-floor level leading to a central door, and a central first-floor door; the former warehouse has a large double door to the left, and a door to the right, both with segmental heads and a first floor door to the left; the inn has a bay window to ground floor left, with hipped roof, and a central door with pedimented porch, the attached cottage has a half-glazed door. Mid-to-late C19 cottage attached to the south-west (left) end facing south-west; 2 storeys; 3 windows, segmental headed casements; central door. The Swan and its attached buildings are the most prominent of an interesting group of structures at the junction of the Trent and Mersey and Coventry canals. The Trent and Mersey canal was completed in 1777; the surveyor-general was James Brindley. Jean Lindsay, The Trent and Mersey Canal (1979).
